FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 28. 1735.

N^o 131.

CALEB D'ANVERS, Esq;

Invictus alterius macrefcit robur opimis: Irovia Siculi non invenerunt tyranni Majus tumulum

HOR.

I R,

YOU have indeed displayed the Sarcasm of your remarkable Genius in last Saturday's Paper, very prettily upon Blindness; but I must beg Leave to suggest, that there is another Sort which you have wilfully forgot; I mean, that which falls under the Denomination of prejudicial or invidious Blindness, which the greatest Poet this Age has described in this elegant Distich;

All seems infected that th' Infected spy, As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd Eye.

This being peculiar only to yourself and Faction, I was the Reason of your omitting it, and not recommending it to the Care of the celebrated Occultist.
This Sort of Blindness not only most injuriously affects sight, but also the Ears; inasmuch, Sir, that you neither see nor hear, nor will be convinced of the truth of any thing but what corresponds with your Ideas, and is agreeable to your own Opticks, in my humble Opinion it ought to be of the most important Concern to you of any thing in Life; for this, as it excludes and confines the Perspicacity of the Soul eternal Darkness, eclipses the Light of the Understanding, and renders it intirely incapable of seeing the Agency, Worth, and Beauty of any external Object ever, so consequently can never receive any Improvement or Advantage from the Reflections thereof.
This Sort of Blindness which infatuates you to be actually acting the Part of the Buff Body in the Play, every Week to obtrude yourself into the most private Concerns of Life; or, in your own polite Words, to thrust your Nose into every Body's Affairs, till you very justly become the Scorn and Disdain of every man that witnesses the Peace, Interest, and Welfare of his Country. The World really begins to think, that you are too partial to your own dear Foibles, to apt too comely with a specious Veil, while you are too forgetful and impertinent in prying into those of your neighbours; so that I cannot help thinking but that two Lines of Perseus the Roman Satyrists, are a true Description of the best Part of your Life,

Ut nemo in sese tentat descendere, nemo Sed praecedenti spectatur mantica tergo.

It may be rendered thus:

None search the Blindness of the Mind, to know The Mischief that from secret Vices flow, But Eagle-eyed, designing, spiteful, fly, Into their Neighbours Faults too deeply pry.

No Wonder therefore to find, that this Species of Blindness precipitates you into all Manner of Dangers; it brings you in a Scene of Iniquity; and makes you about in the Dark amidst the Blaze of Noon; in a Word, exposes you to the Contempt, Abhorrence, and Indignation of all Mankind. Methinks it would be a Piece of Charity in this excellent Occultist, to obliterate this Defect of Sight into Consideration, to endeavour to devise something which might restore to yourself, and eradicate the Distemper. But as it seems to depend upon some supernatural Operation, an unexpected Revolution of Fate, I fear this ingenious Gentleman will despair of the Success of any of his Speculations. However, our famous Optician, whom you so much admire, for aught I know (should he be disposed to turn his Thoughts this Way) invent something which might be of some Service to you in this Case, at least to your Followers, who labour under the same Distemper, walk in the same dreary Paths of Darkness, in the Shadow of Death. You will easily conceive, Mr. D'Anvers, that I mean some curious Perspective, which might, as it were in a Mirror, represent the Blindness and Depravity of your own Mind, and all the Varnish and Disguise of a corrupted Soul, which unbounded Pride, and an over-bearing Spirit of Opposition, hath plunged into an Abyss of Darkness, and a Chaos of Confusion. What a Maze of Errors have you travelled in for many Years past! How happy had you been, had you never waded out of your Depth!

How free from Trouble and Disguises, had you never contracted this Blindness! And, lastly, how pleasant had you sailed down the Tide of Life, had you learned to rest content in Heaven's Determination! For it is this inveterate Blindness which makes you so short-sighted, as not to discover your own Folly; so narrow-sighted, as not to extend your noble Views to any other Objects but those of your own Pride, Arrogance, and Ambition; which has brought such a Malady upon your Eye, as causes it to be wholly inverted upon yourself, and confined to your own sinister Views, without the least Regard or Tenderness for the common Good and Welfare of your Friends and Countrymen; and, lastly, 'tis this which infatuates you to believe, that you are one of those second-sighted Gentlemen, who can portend the Event of future Things; but, to your great Disappointment, you find yourself to be annually mistaken, and the Credit of your Prognosticks to sink and dwindle away into universal Contempt and Ridicule.
'Tis from this prejudicial Blindness that proceeds the Warmth of your Party-Zeal, the Violation of Friendship, and a World of Contention, which tends to blow up the Coals of Discord, and set the whole Nation in a Blaze; a Cure of which, I fear, cannot be effected without the most exquisite Torture. If you would be understood not to be affected with this Sort of Blindness, nor that of Avarice, Pride, and Ambition, the World expects to see you act coolly; to shew your Generosity, to practise Meekness, and appear with Humility; otherwise we shall look upon you as a Hypocrite; as one that squints and looks several Ways at once; as one whom the M—y ought to have a very vigilant and circumspectful Eye over, to take Care of for the common Peace and Harmony of human Society, that the World may be no longer deluded by so notorious an Impostor, and that your Friends and Confederates may no longer be made the Dupes and Instruments of so unskilful an Operator; nor can I help thinking, but that this Sort of Blindness is more pernicious than that of your famous

Pulveris exquisi Jasta.

For this at once involves you in such Clouds of Darkness, as totally deprives you of your Sight for ever, and makes you resolved to oppose the Truth, tho' it be ever so clear. Thus are you irrecoverably lost, while Time may blow away a little Dust from their Eyes, and restore them again to the Light. What therefore remains, Mr. D'Anvers, but that, as the Scripture emphatically says, You should pull the Beam out of your own Eye, before you presume to cast out the Mote that is in your Brother's Eye, that the Blind may not lead the Blind till they both fall into the Pit of Destruction?

In reading your famous Piece of History of the Martalls, a learned Gentleman who late by me, put me in Mind, that that of the Vendalls was antecedent to it; and that one of them, whom he took Notice to be the Demagogue of your Party, was become so wicked an Apostate, and so vile a Prostitute (you know when, Sir,) that he would have sacrificed the Rights and Liberties of his Country, to the Favour and Interest of a Popish Pretender, had not the Guardian Powers of this Isle timely prevented it; and this is the honest Gentleman who is one of your modern Travellers, who is continually rambling round the World with a Vertigo in his Head, and the Stings of an evil Conscience in his Heart, to verify the Wit of your Friend Horace.

Caelum, non animum mutant, qui trans mare currunt.

Yes, Sir, such is the Head of your Forces, whose notorious Faults, and detestable Crimes you connive at, and, as the Scripture has it, wink with your Eyes, that seeing you may not see, and return to the Truth.
Thus are you become wilfully blind, and led about by him like Dogs coupled together in a String, to the Scandal of human Nature, and the eternal Dishonour of the Laws of a free and well governed Country.

And now I humbly submit to the Candour and unprejudiced Judgment of my Countrymen, which stands in Need of the Cure of Blindness, the True Patriots, or the Sham ones; and am,

Dear Caleb,

Your very humble Servant,

WILL. HINT.
